NO CIA SPIES ON CAMPUS

Special to the Guardian

Ann Arbor, Mich.

Students at the University of Michigan demonstrated here last month against the renewed boldness of the CIA, particularly in its recruitment at the University of Michigan Law School.

"No more torture, no more coups, no more law school interviews!" the 250 demonstrators chanted. CIA attorney Ernest Mayerfield was on campus for the second time in two years to interview law students. He admitted that increasing public awareness of the CIA's activities has led to a greater need for attorneys by the agency.

"For many years the CIA operated without much need for lawyers," Mayerfield said. "No one took us to court much, and not on substantive matters."

Under the Reagan administration, said Wayne State student government president Russ Bellant, "they [intelligence agencies] are going to increase covert operations at home and abroad. We must again militantly challenge the CIA wherever it pops up its head."

A broad-based coalition organized the demonstration, including Ann Arbor Cuba Committee Against the Blockade, Black Student Union, Committee Against Registration and the Draft, Graduate Employees Organization, National Lawyers Guild, Science for the People and Young Workers Liberation League.
